1. Air rises through grate holes into gravitational heating chamber, providing combustion air for the pellets.
2. Air enters the gravitational heating chamber through the lower, outer cylinder holes.
3. As air inside the gravitational heating chamber is heated it expands and rises.
4. A stream of heated air exits from each upper hole in inner cylinder.
5. Wood pellets burn, producing flames, heat, and combustible gases.
6. An entertaining, bright smokeless ring of flames is produced when the rising combustible gases meet the hot, fresh air exiting the upper interior ring of holes.
7. The hot, combustible gases not burned in the lower part of the unit continue to rise and burn with bright, smokeless flames.
